Tension strength parallel-to-surface is the maximum stress sustained by a specimen from a test with tension forces applied parallel to the surface. Tests are made with the long dimension of the specimen cut both parallel and perpendicular to the long dimension of the board to determine the strength in each of the primary panel directions.

design strength and stiffness. Load capacities in Table A are based on normal duration of load for untreated panels under dry conditions. Because these values are plywood-specific, the appropriate panel grade and construction adjustment factors, C G, have already been applied. Designers must be careful to avoid making the C G adjustments again.
